Mr. JAMES is the only conspicuous representative of the school of fiction so elegantly illustrated by Sir Waiter Soott. His prolling genius has given birth to a whole library of novels, on which the vertice of public opinion has set its seal of approval. In splender of diction, ease and copionsness of description, and felicity of character-drawing, James has few rivals and, with these merits, his popularity with the million will sustain the test of time. The historical character of many of his novels makes them agreeable sources of information. They refresh the me nory of past scenes, and give a glowing illustration to the incidents of a by-gone age.
